CRUZ RISES IN IOWA

1 Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump had a new target on Sunday, calling fellow White House contender Ted Cruz "a little bit of a maniac" as the senator surpassed him in an Iowa poll. Cruz's dogged pursuit of conservative Iowa voters has paid off in the form of a 10-point lead over Trump in the state, which has one of the earliest presidential contests. REUTERS

DEADLY SYRIAN STRIKES

2 Intense air and missile strikes on a school district and other areas in insurgent-held Damascus suburbs killed dozens of people on Sunday, including children, according to a monitoring group and local rescue workers. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said unidentified war planes hit the town of Douma, 10 miles northeast of the capital, and surface-to-surface missiles fired by the Syrian army also hit the surrounding areas, including Eastern Ghouta. The strikes killed at least two children and a school principal, it said. REUTERS

FACEBOOK VANDALIZED

3 Vandals have damaged a building housing Facebook's offices in Hamburg, smashing glass, throwing paint and spraying "Facebook dislike" on a wall, police in the northern German city said on Sunday. The overnight attack on the social networking group was carried out by a group of 15-20 people. REUTERS

BRAZILIANS PROTEST

4 Thousands of Brazilians took to the streets of major cities on Sunday to demand President Dilma Rousseff's ouster, but the first nationwide protests since formal impeachment proceedings began were smaller than similar events earlier this year. Police did not provide official estimates, although television stations said there were about 6,000 in Sao Paulo and slightly fewer in Rio de Janeiro and Brasilia. REUTERS

WINDOW CRAWLER CAUGHT

5 A Roslindale man is in custody for breaking and entering after he was seen crawling into an Allston apartment window on Saturday. A witness watched as the backpack-toting suspect, 34-year-old Antony McLean, forced open the first-floor window in the area of 21 Chester Street and climbed inside, according to a police report. McLean ran from police when officers who responded to the scene spotted him standing in a rear alley near the alleged robbery, the report said. He was arrested after a brief foot pursuit. SUSPICIOUS PACKAGE

6 Police breifly stopped traffic to investigate a suspicious package outside the Roxbury Crossing T stop Sunday morning. Officers responded to the package, an unattended backpack left outside the Orange Line stop, around 8:23 Sunday morning and gave the all-clear by 9 a.m. SPENCER BUELL

Help Metro make magic

Please donate to the Metro Magic annual holiday toy drive during the 2015 holiday season.

In keeping with the holiday spirit of giving, Metro is once again launching Tony's Metro Magic, our annual toy drive for underprivileged children in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

This year marks the seventh anniversary of the toy drive, which was renamed in memory of the man who oversaw the project for more than four years, Tony Metcalf, Metro's longest-running editor-in-chief. Metcalf passed away in 2013 from colon cancer at the age of 50.

Metcalf lit up every year as he saw the faces of children unwrap their holiday gifts. It is our goal to keep that magic alive. We are now asking readers to contribute what they can to Tony's Metro Magic.

Metro has created a wish list at the Target website that readers can access by going to www.metro.us and clicking on the Tony's Metro Magic logo.

From there, just choose the toys you wish to donate, pay online using Target's secure payment system. Your gifts, along with your name attached, will be delivered to Metro's offices in each city.

This season we hope you will remember the children who will spend the holidays in shelters or who may not have gifts to open. Even one small gift can make a big difference in a child's holiday season. METRO

Shar-pei pug needs a home for Christmas

The puppy, recovering from a serious illness, was bought over the Internet from a Missouri puppy mill.

Nelson rests in his cage after his surgery. MSPCA-ANGELL

A shar-pei pug puppy named Nelson, who was surrendered to the Boston MSPCA after it was bought at a Missouri puppy mill was still taking his medications and getting lots of sleep this weekend as he continued his recovery.

Nelson endured a 20-hour truck ride from Missouri to Massachusetts last week, the MSPCA said, and became critically ill with giardia, an intestinal illness that caused severe dehydration, vomiting and diarrhea.

"Make no mistake, Nelson is the face of online puppy sales, in which unsuspecting buyers purchase dogs from thousands of miles away and with no opportunity to inspect the living conditions or to meet the pets in advance," said MSPCA's director of public relations Rob Halpin.

Surgeons removed a mass of tangled intestines from his abdomen before untangling and reinserting them, Halpin said. He has been on heavy doses of antibiotics and pain medicine.

The puppy ended up at the MSPCA when the person who had bought him online, sight unseen, from a "puppy mill" breeder only a week before, brought the dog to the Boston animal hospital, Halpin said.

"The poor little guy is still very nauseous and not eating on his own," the MPSCA wrote in a Sunday update on Instagram. "Keep sending good thoughts [and donations if you're able] his way!"

On Friday, Halpin said Nelson's progress was so promising, he will be available for adoption in time for Christmas.

"The MSPCA's message of "Adopt Don't Buy" never rings more true than today," Halpin said.

"Nelson's plight focuses a spotlight on the dangers of 'online only' pet sales, in which buyers are not able to visit the breeder to inspect conditions or meet dogs before purchasing," said Alyssa Krieger, MSPCA manager of animal care and adoption. "This was a classic puppy mill situation and it's not surprising to us that Nelson was so sick, he was likely critically ill before he was even brought to Massachusetts."

Halpin said Nelson's surgery and hospitalization cost nearly $4,000 and was paid for via the Alison Irving Fund, which was established in memory of a former MSPCA-Angell employee and enables the organization to treat thousands of animals every year before they are placed for adoption.

T should be fully automated: Expert

The Red Line's "ghost train" mishap points to a need for fully automated trains, said an expert.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

Reports that a Red Line train went barreling through four stations without a driver on Thursday gave riders quite a stir this week. The mishap, believed to have been caused by operator error, birthed an MBTA controversy that was big even for an agency used to dealing with commuters' scorn.

The facts so far suggest the operator, a T veteran of more than 25 years, rigged his controls — a swivel-mounted throttle — with some kind of cord. That choice, investigators believe, was the first in a series of errors that ended up sending what's since been called the "ghost train" on its now-infamous journey.

T-minders noticed the error within a minute, killed power on the track and averted disaster. No one was hurt (the operator sustained minor injuries when he was clipped by his runaway train). The T pledged to never again let another train leave the station without a driver. But maybe that's the wrong idea. Maybe, an expert told Metro, trains shouldn't have drivers at all.

"It's not crazy," said William Messner, a mechanical engineer at Tufts University specializing in automatic control systems. "From a technology standpoint, it's certainly doable. It's a question of expense, really, and of course public acceptance of autonomous trains."

> "It's not crazy."
> Messner

Around the world, he said, there are transit agencies whose use of "driverless" trains are that way on purpose, or will be soon.

Passengers on Vancouver's SkyTrain can board fully automated rapid transit.

An elevated tram in Oakland hoists passengers on its Airport Connector in driverless cars pulled by cables.

Officials in Mexico City are studying the use of automated gondolas as an alternative to building a subway.

By the mid-2020s, the London Underground expects to welcome fully driverless trains to the "tube."

None of those cases are apples-to-apples comparisons, of course. And the MBTA, with its ancient infrastructure, is not exactly the perfect case study for robotic retrofitting, Messner admitted.

"This system was not designed to be autonomous," he said.

Converting to an automated system could also come with an enormous price tag — this for a system currently facing a widening budget deficit and an expensive list of needed repairs.

"The MBTA has a $7.3 billion maintenance backlog. Our primary focus is to continue making the investments necessary to bring the existing vehicles and infrastructure into a state-of-good-repair," MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said in an email.

Parts of the system are automated already — problems began for the "ghost train," remember, when a glitch in the signal at Braintree station would not let the train pass. The train rolled away from the station only after its driver left the train to flip a "bypass" switch and override the system, officials have said.

Flipping that switch also overrode an automated system that would have stopped Thursday's runaway train, had it come across another train ahead of it on the track, according to the T.

But converting to a full-on automated train system, Messner argued, could make for a safer, more efficient commute by removing or reducing the risk of human error altogether.

After all, he said, as we learned last week, the old-fashioned train-driver-working-a-throttle method leaves open the risk of controls being manipulated.

"It's clear we're more vulnerable than we like to believe," Messner said.

Mini-play in a moving car

Boston producer Nick Medvescek's "Teddy" the first in a series of mini-productions in unusual places around the city.

SPENCER BUELL
spencer.buell@metro.us

Producer Nicholas Medvescek, left, and playwright Mj Halberstadt of the new play "Teddy," which takes place in a car. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

A car pulls up and you get inside. In the driver's seat is a woman grappling with her father's unusual illness. She drives to a liquor store and picks up an ex-boyfriend. On the dash is her dad, who has miraculously transformed into a silent teddy bear.

Such is the conceit of "Teddy," the unusual 15-minute mini-drama staged entirely inside a car as it circles the streets of Brookline.

The one-night-only show premiered on Sunday in Coolidge Corner, where audience members, up to three at a time, watched the action unfold not from a chair in a theater mezzanine, but from the backseat of a 2007 Toyota Corolla.

"The cool thing about where [lead actress Chelsea Schmidt] is sitting, no matter where you're sitting you get a view of her through the rearview mirror," said Nick Medvescek, the play's producer. "She has to convey a lot through her eyes."

"Teddy," which also stars Will Madden, is the first installment of a project of low-budget mini-productions or "mini-pros," which Medvescek said aims to challenge what it means to put on a play in Boston.

Most productions in the city, he said, take months of planning and rehearsals and have to draw enough of an audience to pack a theater.

"Mini-pros," meanwhile, take almost no time to plan and stage, cost almost nothing and can happen almost anywhere. Medvescek said he's partnering with various Boston artists to put on shows in unexpected spots all around the city in 2016 — a parking garage, say, or a living room.

"That's where our modern audiences want to be. Boston has some of the most beautiful theater spaces in the country," he said. "But my work has been probing areas outside that space for what we can do with it."

There were obviously, some challenges that came with putting on a show in a moving vehicle, with an actor at the wheel, said MJ Halberstadt, the playwright.

In addition to remembering their lines and giving a compelling performance while keeping everyone safe, actors had to grapple with surprises on the road, he said.

In the event of traffic or some other on-road event, the actors were instructed to improvise by riffing or fiddling with the radio.

"There was a jaywalker who walked in front of the car during [a rehearsal], so she just wove a reference to that into her next line," Halberstadt said.

Hopping into a car for an immersive theater experience may not be everyone's choice for a night out, he admitted.

But for the Uber and Lyft generation accustomed to the idea of hailing a ride at the push of a button, why not hail a play?

"There are so many theaters in Boston that are going to tremendous lengths to appease as many people as possible, and that's good and well," he said. "In my work, in general, I create experiences that are for younger audiences who are willing to follow a story in unexpected ways."

Have your own idea for a "mini-pro"? Medvescek said he is currently taking pitches online.

Russia warns Turkey over Aegean warship incident

The episode is likely to heighten tensions between the two nations who are seriously at odds over Syria and the Turkish shooting down of a Russian military jet last month.

Russian President Vladimir Putin GETTY IMAGES

Russia on Sunday warned Turkey to stop staging what it called provocations against its forces in or near Syria after one of its warships fired warning shots at a Turkish vessel in the Aegean to avoid a collision.

The Russian Defense Ministry said one of its warships, the destroyer Smetlivy, had been forced to fire the warning shots on Sunday morning and that it had summoned the Turkish military attache over the incident.

"The Turkish military diplomat was given a tough explanation about the potentially disastrous consequences from Ankara's reckless actions towards Russia's military contingent fighting against international terrorism in Syria," the Defense Ministry said in a statement.

"In particular, our deep concerns about more Turkish provocations toward the Russian destroyer Smetlivy were conveyed."

Earlier on Sunday, the ministry said that the Turkish fishing vessel failed to respond to Smetlivy's warnings and changed course sharply only after shots were fired before passing within just over 500 meters of the warship.

"Only by luck was tragedy avoided," the ministry said.

Turkish Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu, who was in Rome for talks on Libya, said Ankara was investigating the matter and would make a statement once it had more information.

He also reiterated Turkey's position that it wanted to resolve its difficulties with Russia. "We want to solve the tension with dialogue," he said, in comments broadcast by TRT Turk.

Russian President Vladimir Putin, who called the downing of the plane a "stab in the back," has since imposed economic sanctions on Turkey as a retaliatory measure.

Earlier this month, Turkey complained to Russia over an incident in which a Russian sailor was pictured brandishing a rocket launcher on the deck of a naval ship passing through Istanbul. REUTERS

North Texas college student with ax shot dead by police

University of North Texas TWITTER @ UNTNEWS

A police officer at the University of North Texas shot and killed an ax-wielding student suspected of knocking out car windows early on Sunday morning.

A university police officer responded to reports of the vandalism and encountered a white male suspect, who advanced toward him with the ax and was shot, President Neal Smatresk said in a statement posted on Twitter and addressed to the university community.

No one else was hurt, he said.

The dead man was later identified by the Tarrant County medical examiner as Ryan McMillan, 21. He died at a hospital at 1:33 a.m MT according to the examiner's report.

"This is a tragic event that saddens us as a university community," Smatresk wrote. "We offer our condolences to the individuals, their families and all involved."

Counseling is available to any student or employee in need, Smatresk said. The officer was placed on administrative leave pending further investigation, he added. REUTERS

FBI wraps up search of California lake for shooting clues

FBI divers have wrapped up a three-day search of a lakebed where authorities suspect a couple inspired by Islamic State dumped evidence linked to their massacre of 14 people, an official said on Sunday.

The divers have retrieved objects from Seccombe Lake, Laura Eimiller, a Federal Bureau of Investigation spokeswoman, said in an email. She declined to describe the objects or say whether they appeared to be tied to the mass shooting.

Since Thursday, divers have been searching the San Bernardino lake, in a public park, about 2.5 miles north of the site of the shooting.

U.S. officials have said their investigation has yet to turn up evidence that foreign militants directed Syed Rizwan Farook, 28, or Tashfeen Malik, 29, when the married pair stormed a holiday gathering of his co-workers at a regional center in San Bernardino on Dec. 2 and opened fire with assault rifles.

The couple shot dead 14 people and wounded more than 20 in a rampage the FBI said it was treating as an act of terrorism inspired by Islamic militants. If that is confirmed, it would be the most lethal such attack on U.S. soil since Sept. 11, 2001.

Farook, the U.S.-born son of Pakistani immigrants, and Malik, a Pakistani native he married last year in Saudi Arabia, were killed in a shootout with police hours after the assault in San Bernardino, 60 miles east of Los Angeles.

ABC News and other media have reported the FBI divers at the lake were looking for a computer hard drive that belonged to the couple, but Eimiller declined to confirm that.

The underwater search stemmed from leads indicating Farook and Malik had been in the vicinity of Seccombe Lake on the day of the killings, the FBI has said.

The FBI has said the couple declared they were acting on behalf of Islamic State. But FBI Director James Comey has said there was no evidence the militant group was aware of them prior to their attack. REUTERS

Muslim-Americans struggle with the fallout from San Bernardino attack

Unidentified men pray in a mosque during a Friday prayer service given by Imam Mohamed Almasmari at the Muslim Unity Center in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan. GETTY IMAGES

President Obama asked Americans on Sunday to not turn against Muslims after the Paris and San Bernardino attacks, but rather work with the Muslim-American community in fighting homegrown extremism.

With tears in her eyes, Mohammad Halisi's young daughter asked her father, "Why are we bad?" after seeing reports that a Muslim couple killed 14 people in California last week, and wanted to know whether she should hide the fact she is Muslim from others at her school.

Recalling the conversation while choking back his own tears, the 61-year-old father said he felt frustrated that he and his family were being held responsible for the actions of people he branded "a couple of idiot terrorists."

"It's getting to a point where you have to hide who you are," Halisi said on Friday night at the Islamic Society of Corona-Norco mosque where leaders and law enforcement met to address negative perceptions of the Muslim community.

"Seven-year-old kids cannot say they're Muslims because of the bad atmosphere we have."

The mosque is just 25 miles from San Bernardino, where U.S.-born Syed Rizwan Farook, 28, and his Pakistani-born wife Tashfeen Malik, 29, opened fire on his co-workers last week in what the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation is treating as an act of terror.

Malik had pledged allegiance to Islamic State on Facebook around the time of the attack and the FBI believes the two had been radicalized for some time.

Muslim-Americans across the country have said they are worried about a backlash, as happened in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks. A handful of incidents at mosques and a rash of anti-Muslim political rhetoric over the last week appear to be compounding their fears of growing Islamophobia.

On Friday, a fire burned the entrance to a mosque in Southern California's Coachella Valley, some 75 miles from San Bernardino. A 23-year-old man was arrested on suspicion of arson and for committing a hate crime, the Los Angeles Times reported.

A pig's head was thrown at a mosque in Philadelphia on Monday and a mosque in Jersey City, New Jersey, received a letter calling Muslims "evil" and telling them to "go back to the desert."

Several U.S. mosques this year have been subjected to protests by armed groups. On Saturday, a group of fewer than 10 people, some wearing camouflage and rifles slung over their shoulders, stood outside a mosque in the Dallas suburb of Richardson and held signs and American flags, according to images and reports from local media. Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump ratcheted up the rhetoric on Monday by calling for a ban on Muslim immigrants, students and other travelers entering the country, provoking sharp rebukes across the U.S. political spectrum and from abroad. Taylor Swift has gone mad with trademarking power

Oh, Taylor Swift, you really need to calm down. The 25-year-old pop star decided to close out her banner year by trying to trademark a whole slew of terms, including "Blank space," "And I'll write your name," "a girl named Girl," Swiftmas" and … "1989." (Which leads me to wonder: How do you trademark a year?) Swift filed 20 trademark applications in all, but don't worry about them going through. Even if she's eventually successful, you can talk about the year 1989 without Swift's permission — unless you're referring to her album. I know her tour literally just ended and all, but should we be worried that Swift has too much free time on her hands?

Jennifer Lawrence and Amy Schumer plan matching Golden Globes looks

They really are the best friends that ever were, apparently. When Jennifer Lawrence found herself up against pal Amy Schumer in this year's Golden Globes race, the "Joy" star took it as an opportunity for fun rather than a chance for competition to drive a wedge in their friendship. "We're going to try to figure out to wear the exact same thing. That's my mission. I really want us to wear the same thing," Lawrence tells E! News. "She's going to have to wear Dior. I'm just going to have to have Dior make two of whatever they're making for me." Simple enough! Because nothing says friendship like creating an unfair "who wore it better" scenario.

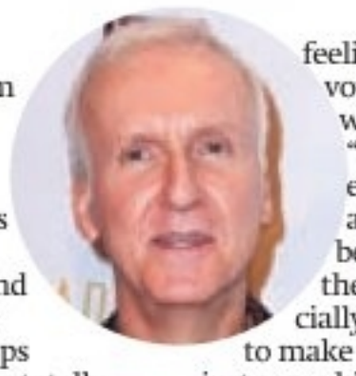
'Star Wars' toy commercial

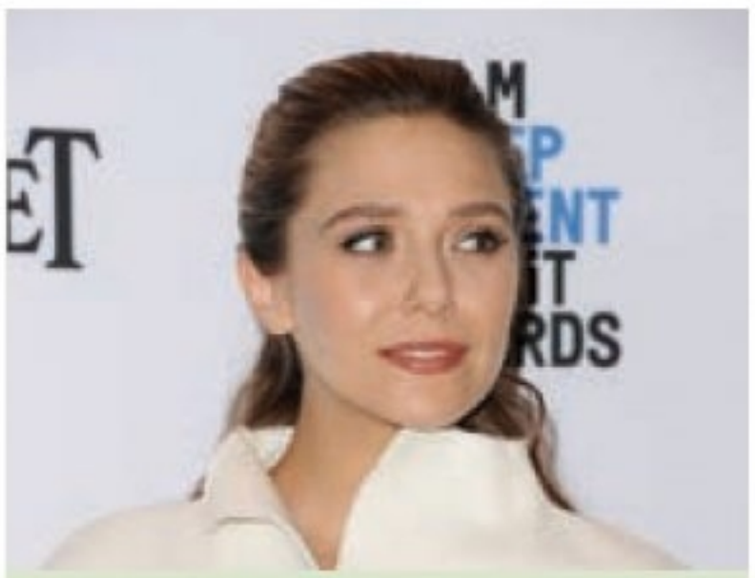
Hey, adult "Star Wars" fans who lined up at midnight on Force Friday to buy all the new toys tied to "The Force Awakens" a few months ago: "Saturday Night Live" is calling you out with this new parody commercial that puts actual kids excited to play with the new action figures alongside grown-up fans and collectors. You can reenact scenes from the movie or, as one big guy puts it, "leave them in the box and never touch them!"

James Cameron still cares about 'Avatar'



As we're just days away from the sixth anniversary of the release of "Avatar," James Cameron wants to remind you that those sequels he keeps threatening are totally still happening. Really. All three of them. "I'm in the process of doing another pass through all three scripts right now," he tells Entertainment Weekly.

And let's just say he's feeling a bit nervous about the whole thing. "Obviously, expectations are going to be very high on these films, especially on 'Avatar 2,' to make sure it wasn't just some big fluke the first time," he says. "So we've got to deliver. I've created a nice rod for my own back, so they say." Wait, who says that? I've never heard that expression before.



Elizabeth Olsen dumped her fiancé over the phone

Oh man, this is rough. Boyd Holbrook, former fiancé of "Avengers: Age of Ultron" star Elizabeth Olsen, apparently feels enough time has passed to vent about the demise of their relationship — a breakup neither had officially confirmed before. "On the same day that my best friend died, I got a call from my girl to tell me it was over," Holbrook tells Man of the World magazine, referring to the split as a "divorce," even. The one-two punch of Olsen's breakup call and friend David Armstrong's death led Holbrook to become "consumed with my own personal depression," he says, though he did eventually cheer himself up. "What happened over the course of the journey was that I started noticing the different types of trees," he says. "I started noticing beauty, the details." Oh. OK then.

Genuine question. Who first invented the concept of heaven?

Did Marion Cotillard just humanize Lady Macbeth?

The Oscar-winner brings something new to Shakespeare's play.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Marion Cotillard has a unique take on Lady Macbeth in the new film of "The Scottish Play." THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

With the new film of "Macbeth," Marion Cotillard wasn't just worried about playing an iconic character. She was also nervous about being a French actor speaking Shakespeare.

But the Oscar-winner learned to find her own Lady Macbeth, opposite Michael Fassbender as the murderous Thane-turned-King. And she enjoyed it so much she's already reunited with her co-star and her director, Justin Kurzel, for a very different film: the big movie version of video game "Assassin's Creed."

How did you approach playing a character played by so many over the centuries?

When I started working on the role, I had this pressure that came from that fact that she's so iconic. Many actresses have done it before, brilliantly. I was like, "What am I going to do to not be compared with Judi Dench, for example, who reached absolute perfection?" As much as I loved her performance, I needed to get rid of her, because she was stuck in my brain.

GETTY IMAGES

How did you get over that?

I thought, "Justin is such an amazing director, I just need to put myself in his hands." His vision was very special, and it's very different from the Orson Welles one or the Roman Polanski one. Therefore my interpretation would be different, too. He wanted to find the intimacy between the two characters. He wanted to find the humanity.

Was Shakespeare something you studied back when you first started learning English?

We studied Shakespeare, but it was in French. I started learning English in school, but with French teachers. I really started learning English because I love this language, and I wanted to be able to express myself in it.

The first time I did an American movie was Tim Burton's film ["Big Fish," from 2003], and I struggled a lot on set. I wanted to be comfortable. I did a total immersion after that, in school. What really helped me improve my English was working on Michael Mann's movie "Public Enemies." I had a dialect coach and we worked for six months.

This is a Shakespeare movie that doesn't make the language primary. A lot of it is about watching them as they don't speak.

That's what happens in life: We're not talking all the time. You observe people. Sometimes you can learn a lot about someone by observing them when they're not talking. It's very interesting to watch the silence of a person, to watch the way they watch the world or other people. You learn a lot from that.

You've talked about having a hard time letting go of Edith Piaf when you made "La Vie en Rose." Did you have a hard time letting go of this one?

No. At the end of the day it could be hard, because the next day I would have a big scene and I'd have to work on it. But I've learned to enter a character and get out of it.

"Macbeth" for today

This is also about how brutal that period of time was for humanity. We like to think we've advanced over the centuries, but in other ways we haven't much at all.

We're less connected to the Earth, and we've created the illusion that money, power and owning things will lead us to happiness. The movie tells us if you don't face your fears and pain, if you try to cover this with violence or the illusion of power, it will lead you to madness. That's the same today. We're in a mad world where we cover our pain and fear by buying a new TV or buying a new dress, buying a new cellphone. It's just an illusion. It doesn't lead us to happiness.

Nick Jonas, Hailee Steinfeld aim for Mass. appeal

And other takeaways from last Thursday's Jingle Ball concert

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Jingle Ball took over T.D. Garden on Thursday night with KISS 108 and iHeartRadio. The annual concert presented headliner Scottish DJ-producer Calvin Harris in his full Amadeus glory, atop a multilevel platform stage. The ambiguity of what Harris — who is the world's high-earning DJ and was paid an estimated $66 million last year, according to Forbes — does behind that laptop remains, but what he lacks in transparency, he makes up in commanding a crowd of crop-topped teens to jump and sway.

Of course, there was plenty more to see. A rotating stage! Laser light shows! Five Seconds of Summer was there. Demi Lovato, too! Here are our ICYMI takeaways for the night:

'90s FTW: Nick Jonas got every 30-something on their feet when he added a cover of Boston-bred Bell Biv DeVoe's 1990 hit "Poison" into his set. Meanwhile, newcomer Natalie La Rose added Crystal Waters' "Gypsy Woman," a welcome introduction for all the millennials who didn't recognize her name, and the tweens who mistook it for an original.

Pitched as perfect: While Hailee Steinfeld's soft-spoken cover of Jessie J's "Flashlight" in "Pitch Perfect 2" led to Anna Kendrick's passing of the film's proverbial torch, it doesn't translate to her live stage show. Her self-love anthem, "Love Myself," set the tone for her first run of live shows, as she led the crowd in a rowdy chant in a gold sequined leotard.

Demi demos: Lovato fans were unmistakably the most aggressive of the pack, flooding the stage screen's Twitter stream with "OMG CRYING, DEMI, SCREAMING" tweets for the duration of her set. She performed "Mr. Hughes," a bluesy Winehouse-esque track from her new album, "Confident," informing the Boston crowd it was its live debut. "It was a little all over the place," she humbly admitted. "But my band sounded awesome."

NSFWO: That's Not Safe for Wee Ones — the radio edits are off onstage, and we're all reminded just how explicit The Weeknd can get. But, well, YOLO.

Want to communicate in order to get what you want? You need to master this art.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

One of the most popular self-help books ever written is "How to Win Friends and Influence People" by Dale Carnegie, and, frankly, it's no wonder: Who doesn't want to will others into doing what one wants, whether through one's presence, words or sheer charisma?

Well, life coach Niurka — yes, just Niurka — says the key to such persuasiveness, and to one's empowerment, is communication, and an important component to that is rapport.

"Rapport is essential in all negotiations, because when there's rapport the decision-maker will want to work with you, even if you're not saying the perfect thing," says Niurka, whose new book is "Supreme Influence: Change Your Life With the Power of the Language You Use." But you can't exactly fake chemistry. We asked the guru for her advice on establishing that kind of connection with your boss, coworker or superior.

Be aware

The first thing is awareness: After all, you have to be self-aware enough to know when you aren't establishing a rapport with someone — or when you lose it. "Oftentimes people communicate too soon," she says. "They're so in tune with what they want to say rather than being totally present with the person and the situation." Notice your target's body language, her breathing, her mood, and try to play off that.

Niurka PROVIDED

Care about the bigger picture

When talking to a boss or supervisor, don't make it about you, you, you. "You have to authentically care about the bigger picture, not just your agenda," advises Niurka. "Before you go in, ask yourself not just 'What do I want?' or 'How can I get what I want in this conversation?' but 'What's important to this person, to this company as a whole?' or 'How can I show up in away that supports them so they know that I'm the best person for this job or task?'"

Ask questions

One important — and easy — way to establish rapport and show that you genuinely care about the other person's concerns is to ask questions. "Say: 'I'm curious about what's working, or what isn't working,' in terms of a particular context — or, 'If you can change one thing in this department what would it be?'" suggests Niurka. "You want someone to get passionate and then connect on that point of passion: You don't want to be the one trying to sell them on it. You want them to have a buy-in."

One more thing

When you're going to an important meeting — whether it's one-on-one with your boss or giving a big presentation to a group of people — be clear on your intention, without attachment to outcome," says Niurka. "You don't want to get tunnel vision, so you've got to be clear about what is the essence of what it is that you're inspired to create or achieve, and then be open to all the different ways you can make that a reality.

My best advice: Juice Press' Marcus Antebi and Michael Karsch

How do you build a lifestyle brand when the feedback loop is unlimited?

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

In 2010, former competitive Thai boxer Marcus Antebi found himself fed up with the lack of nonprocessed, cold-pressed juice options on store shelves and decided to open a tiny Manhattan retail space of his own, naming it Juice Press. With chairman and lead investor Michael Karsch, Antebi has since expanded the brand to 26 store locations and counting (a total of 29 are planned by the end of 2015).

Karsch, a Harvard Business School alumnus, and Antebi offer their best advice for the next generation of entrepreneurs — including how to deal with consumers who can be as opinionated and vocal as they are loyal.

If you're going to build a "lifestyle brand," make sure it fits your own lifestyle

Antebi recalls another juice shop owner he met when starting out: "The first thing he advised me was to build your categories and menu to fit your lifestyle. Don't chase after everyone else's lifestyle. You're your best consumer. That's what makes it authentic. And if you believe in it, spend every dollar in the world to make it work."

Embrace the growing pains — everyone's got them

"Professional growth is always inherently embarrassing," said Karsch. "If you want to progress in your career, you need to recognize that you need to expose yourself to failure and embarrassment, and if you don't do that you'll never move forward. I constantly try to believe I can get better and constantly try to listen to other people's perspectives."

Communicate with your outspoken local community, even if it costs you

"People feel like they have this relationship with us, and they feel entitled but in a good way," said Karsch. "Like, 'Hey I went to your store 300 times last year, I feel like I should be able to tell you what bothers me.' And that's very fair. But we try to be a big part of the community, too. Like in Boston, we'll say if you run [from 9 a.m-12 p.m.] on Saturdays and post a picture on Instagram [30 minutes in advance, with hashtags #willrunforjuice, #jprunclub and #juicepress], we'll give you a free juice ... even if it costs us money."

One more thing

Juice Press will open its first sit-down store in Boston this winter at The Street in Chestnut Hill, which will offer raw snacks and salads in addition to its juices. (Locations at 500 Boylston Street and in the Seaport District are also in the works).

Marcus Antebi and Michael Karsch PROVIDED

Steelers win gives Pats a boost

The playoff picture became slightly clearer Sunday.

MATT BURKE and LUKE MILLER
sports@metro.us

Before the Patriots and Texans kicked off Sunday night in Houston, the Pats received some positive news as it related to its push toward a potential bye in the AFC playoffs. Thanks to the Steelers' 33-20 win over the Bengals, the Pats now have a much greater shot at landing one of the two top seeds in the conference. Cincy fell to 10-3 with the loss and still has to play at Denver in two weeks. The top-seeded Broncos also have an extremely tough game this coming Sunday at the aforementioned Steelers. Pittsburgh is still clawing for playoff positioning at 8-5 as the Chiefs (8-5) and Jets (8-5) both hold conference tie-breakers in the wild card race.

The big news in this one was Andy Dalton's thumb injury to his throwing hand. He will miss next week's game but his status after that is unclear. A.J. McCarron (22/32, 280, 2 TD, 2 INT) connected with A.J. Green for a 66-yard touchdown shortly after Dalton left the game. William Gay returned a McCarron interception for a touchdown while the teams were busy trading field goals (they combined for six). DeAngelo Williams found the end zone twice on the ground for Pittsburgh.

Panthers 38, Falcons 0
Carolina built a 21-point lead before the end of the first quarter (including two Ted Ginn touchdown receptions of 74 and 46 yards, his only catches of the day) and never looked back as their march to an undefeated season and Cam Newton's (15/21, 265, 3 TD) march to an MVP trophy continued. The Falcons lost their sixth game in a row.

Jaguars 51, Colts 16
The Colts dropped their second in a row and the loss to Jacksonville ends a 16 game divisional win streak for Indianapolis. Blake Bortles (16/30, 250, 3 TD, 17 rushing yards, TD) connected with his usual suspects, Julius Thomas, Allen Robinson, and Allen Hurns, for touchdowns during a 42-point second half for the Jaguars. With the win, Jacksonville sits a game behind Indianapolis in the division.

Jets 30, Titans 8
Marcus Mariota (21/39, 274, INT) caught a 41-yard touchdown pass, but that was the lone highlight of the day for the Titans, as Ryan Fitzpatrick (21/36, 263, 3 TD) and Chris Ivory (22 carries for 101 yards) led the Jets to a 27-0 lead by halftime.

Eagles 23, Bills 20
Ed Reynolds intercepted Tyrod Taylor (19/36, 268, TD, INT) to seal the victory for Philadelphia. The Eagles now have consecutive victories for the first time since they beat the Giants on Oct. 19th. LeSean McCoy had 109 yards on 24 touches against his former team. DeMarco Murray, his expected replacement, finished with 13 total touches for 36 yards.

Aries Speak up, but avoid being condescending. You will get much further ahead with intelligent, thoughtful responses.

Taurus Speak up and share your opinion in order to make headway. Love and romance will improve your disposition and living arrangements.

Gemini The less time you spend discussing your plans, the easier it will be to get things done without interference. Keep your life simple.

Cancer Take the road less traveled. No matter what you do, if you are unique and innovative in your pursuits, others will take notice and praise you.

Leo Emotional matters will confuse you. Listen to what's being said and weigh the terms or criticism you receive carefully. Consider your options.

Virgo Discuss your plans with someone you want to form a partnership with. A heartfelt display will lead to a collaboration.

Libra Even if someone begs you to offer advice, refrain from meddling. You'll be the one blamed for whatever transpires if you aren't careful.

Scorpio Be direct in your approach to handling both domestic and professional matters. A clear-cut view of your plans will help you avoid setbacks.

Sagittarius Don't send the wrong message. Be exact about your capabilities in order to make a good impression on someone who counts.

Capricorn Don't count on anyone but yourself when it comes to doing what needs to be done. Personal improvements will draw favorable attention.

Aquarius Don't let your overloaded schedule get you down. Take things one step at a time and don't let anyone put undue pressure on you.

Pisces When dealing with people who are secretive, take precautions. You won't get the answers you are looking for from others. EUGENIA LAST
